

Human co-creator

There is a great importance of the human being as a creator. Be it in arts, music, writing or any other area. The question is not about what is being created or whether it's beautiful or ugly, because that's subjective. It's about the origin of the thought that led to the object being created. Is the thought of origin positive and does it have the purpose to create something positive for yourself and or others?

Some people believe the truth to be that God (in whichever way God's perceived) created the world. Others believe that evolution was the creator and others are somewhere in the middle or have a whole different truth. Regardless of which truth you have for yourself, I believe we as humans also have a creative power that can contribute to the positive evolution of the Creation as a whole. One part of that creation is the human evolution.

If you work from a positive mindset to create something that in whichever form can manifest itself into the world or earth reality, then you are positively co-creating the greater cosmic and earth creation.

I believe that each attempt to create something positive from a positive mindset, brings one closer to the real reality of creation as a whole and further away from the reality of scarcity thinking men has created for himself on earth. If one creates out of light and purity, being led by one's true ego-less being, the one you were set out to be from the start, then one is co-creating to a positive evolution of men and earth reality. Hopefully we will fully remember our role as co creators.
